

Filip Matějka

Filip Matějka is a professor of economics at CERGE-EI, joint workplace of Charles University and the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic. In his research he focuses on behavioral economics, macroeconomics and political economy. More specifically, he works mostly on the role of limited information in the economy. He received his Ph.D. in applied mathematics from Princeton University in the US and M.A. in physics from Charles University in Prague.

